

Working with Refugees: Incorporating a relational approach in service delivery

Fritha Melville (MPsych.Clin.) &

Jennifer O'Brien (BOT, MOT)

May 2016

Acknowledgements

ANZACAT^{INC.}

Australian and New Zealand
Association of Cognitive Analytic Therapy

Foundation House

The Victorian Foundation for Survivors of Torture Inc.

Orygen^o
YOUTH Health

Aims

To stimulate dialogue about how incorporating relational principles can enable organisations and practitioners to be more responsive to the needs of refugees.

To encourage organisations and practitioners to incorporate a relational framework both in the direct work with individuals but also as a conceptual framework into service delivery approaches.

Overview

- ◆ The Refugee experience
- ◆ The Recovery Model
- ◆ Relational principles: Cognitive Analytic Therapy
- ◆ A relational framework
- ◆ Summary & Future Implications
- ◆ Resources and references

The Refugee Experience

As you experience these images we want you to imagine yourself as a refugee and how you might then come to relate to others, the world and this might affect your view of yourself

Photo sources
www.sbs.com.au
www.theage.com.au
www.unhcr.com
www.uts.edu.au

